“I don't think there will be a legal system for me.”

Meeting the legal needs of South Sudanese communities in Australia

Danijela Milos

Thesis submitted for the degree of

Doctor of Philosophy

in the

Department of Legal Studies

School of Law

Flinders University, South Australia

October 2012
Table of Contents

Table of Contents ....................................................................................................................... I

Abstract ......................................................................................................................................... IV

Declaration....................................................................................................................................... V

Acknowledgements....................................................................................................................... VI

List of Tables ..................................................................................................................................... VI

List of Figures ................................................................................................................................... VIII

Chapter 1: Introduction .............................................................................................................. VIII

Chapter 2: Access and Need ....................................................................................................... 1

  2.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................................................ 1

  2.2 Definitions ........................................................................................................................................... 12

  2.3 The 'Unmet Legal Need' Movement - 1960s and 1970s ................................................................... 17

    2.3.1 Resulting Policy Changes .............................................................................................................. 19

    2.3.2 Resulting Criticisms ......................................................................................................................... 22

  2.4 The Access to Justice Movement – 1980s and 1990s ....................................................................... 24

    2.4.1 Policy Changes ................................................................................................................................. 28

  2.5 Barriers to Access to Justice .............................................................................................................. 33

    2.5.1 Barriers faced by migrants and refugees ....................................................................................... 35

    2.5.2 Refugee specific barriers .................................................................................................................. 39

  2.6 Recent Developments ...................................................................................................................... 42

  2.7 Conclusion ......................................................................................................................................... 47

Chapter 3: Sudan: A Political and Legal History ......................................................................... 51

  3.1 Introduction ........................................................................................................................................... 51

  3.2 Sudan and Sudanese Culture ............................................................................................................... 52

  3.3 Political History of Sudan .................................................................................................................... 54

    3.3.1 Sudan’s first civil war – 1955-1972 .............................................................................................. 56

    3.3.2 Sudan’s second civil war – 1983-2005 ....................................................................................... 59

    3.3.3 Darfur 2003 – current ..................................................................................................................... 64

  3.4 South Sudan’s Customary Law Legal System ..................................................................................... 66

    3.4.1 Human rights under customary law .............................................................................................. 72

    3.4.2 Differences between Statutory and Customary law ..................................................................... 74

    3.4.3 Legal pluralism ................................................................................................................................. 78

  3.5 Conclusion ......................................................................................................................................... 80
CHAPTER 4: RESETTLEMENT AND ITS CHALLENGES................................. 82
  4.1 INTRODUCTION .................................................................................. 82
  4.2 PRE-MIGRATION EXPERIENCES ...................................................... 83
  4.3 IN-TRANSIT EXPERIENCES ............................................................... 84
    4.3.1 The Story of the Lost Boys ....................................................... 86
    4.3.2 Kakuma Refugee Camp .............................................................. 87
  4.4 IMMIGRATING TO AUSTRALIA ....................................................... 90
    4.4.1 Sudanese Profile in Australia .................................................. 92
  4.5 POST-MIGRATION EXPERIENCES ................................................ 95
    4.5.1 Negative perceptions .............................................................. 101
    4.5.2 Family Issues ......................................................................... 104
    4.5.3 Coping Strategies ................................................................... 106
    4.5.4 Navigating the legal system .................................................. 107
  4.6 CRITICISMS OF PREVIOUS STUDIES ........................................ 112
  4.7 CONCLUSION ................................................................................... 115

CHAPTER 5: RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHODOLOGY ....................... 118
  5.1 INTRODUCTION ................................................................................ 118
  5.2 METHODOLOGY ............................................................................. 119
  5.3 METHOD ......................................................................................... 122
  5.4 LIMITATIONS AND BARRIERS ....................................................... 123
    5.4.1 Reaching potential participants ............................................. 123
    5.4.2 Language and cultural barriers .............................................. 126
    5.4.3 Overcoming barriers .............................................................. 127
  5.5 COMMUNITY ORIENTATION STRATEGY ..................................... 128
    5.5.1 Volunteer work and partnerships ......................................... 128
    5.5.2 Meeting with stakeholders .................................................... 130
    5.5.3 Community events ............................................................... 131
  5.6 INTERVIEW DESIGN AND PREPARATION .................................... 132
  5.7 THE INTERVIEW PROCESS ......................................................... 134
  5.8 PARTICIPANT PROFILE ................................................................. 135
  5.9 ORGANISATION OF DATA FOR ANALYSIS ................................. 142
  5.10 CONCLUSION ............................................................................... 144

CHAPTER 6: PROBLEMS EXPERIENCED .............................................. 146
  6.1 INTRODUCTION ............................................................................... 146
  6.2 TENANCY ISSUES ......................................................................... 148
  6.3 DRIVING ISSUES .......................................................................... 155
  6.4 WORKPLACE ISSUES .................................................................... 157
  6.5 IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS ......................................................... 162
  6.6 EXPERIENCES OF DISCRIMINATION .......................................... 166
6.6.1 Discrimination by police............................................................................................................. 167
6.7 RESPONDING TO LEGAL PROBLEMS.......................................................................................... 169
6.8 CONCLUSION................................................................................................................................. 174

CHAPTER 7: BARRIERS TO ACCESS TO JUSTICE ................................................................. 178
7.1 INTRODUCTION .............................................................................................................................. 178
7.2 FAMILY LAW PROBLEMS............................................................................................................. 178
  7.2.1 Changing gender roles........................................................................................................ 178
  7.2.2 Domestic violence................................................................................................................. 181
  7.2.3 Problems faced by youth..................................................................................................... 185
7.3 BARRIERS IDENTIFIED................................................................................................................. 188
7.4 AWARENESS OF LEGAL RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES..................................................... 194
7.5 CONCLUSION................................................................................................................................. 197

CHAPTER 8: LEGAL CONSCIOUSNESS ................................................................................... 199
8.1 INTRODUCTION .............................................................................................................................. 199
8.2 LEGAL CONSCIOUSNESS............................................................................................................. 200
  8.3 PARTICIPANTS’ UNDERSTANDING OF LAW............................................................................ 202
    8.3.1 Pre-arrival experiences.................................................................................................... 202
    8.3.2 Legal problems perceived as criminal problems.......................................................... 206
    8.3.3 Customary processes........................................................................................................ 207
8.4 ADDRESSING LEGAL NEEDS..................................................................................................... 213
  8.4.1 Legal education................................................................................................................... 213
  8.4.2 Community involvement.................................................................................................... 215
  8.4.3 Culturally competent responses....................................................................................... 218
8.5 CONCLUSION................................................................................................................................. 220

CHAPTER 9: CONCLUSION: IS LEGAL PLURALISM THE ANSWER?......................... 222

APPENDICES .................................................................................................................................. 231

BIBLIOGRAPHY............................................................................................................................... 246

ABSTRACT

Access to justice has traditionally meant access to lawyers and courts. However, over the past fifty years, access to justice has evolved to include access to alternative dispute resolution, non-lawyer advice and self-help remedies. It has been claimed that these services have allowed people who could not access lawyers or courts to access justice. Through a critical evaluation of the concepts of access to justice and legal needs, this thesis argues that the current access to justice framework is too formalistic, creating structural barriers to access to justice for vulnerable groups. In addition, the concepts are insensitive to cultural difference, and so create additional barriers to migrants and refugees.

The thesis examines the legal needs of South Sudanese refugee background communities in Adelaide, South Australia. Through a qualitative analysis, it investigates the legal and everyday problems experienced by 22 participants, and the actions taken to resolve those problems. It is argued that due to their unique pre-arrival experiences of war and human rights violations, participants have low levels of confidence in the formal legal system, viewing the system as alien and disconnected from their daily lives. Furthermore, the thesis explores the South Sudanese customary resolution process, arguing that it is still widely utilised throughout the suburbs of Australia. Therefore, rather than accessing formal legal services available to resolve problems, participants more often seek advice from their communities and community leaders.

It is concluded that this customary system of dispute resolution should be recognised by the Australian legal system. However, this system is based on patriarchal values and prone to human rights violations. Therefore, recognition of plural legal orders is not necessarily easy, and it is important that the inclusion of legal plurality does not further marginalise vulnerable groups within refugee background. The thesis concludes that the access to justice framework needs to expand, recognising and responding to the plurality of legal orders and multiple concepts of justice, and explore culturally appropriate methods of meeting the legal needs of diverse groups.
DECLARATION

I certify that this thesis does not incorporate without acknowledgement any materials previously submitted for a degree or diploma in any university; and that to the best of my knowledge and belief it does not contain any material previously published or written by another person except where due reference is made in the text.

Signed: ________________________________

Date: ________________________________
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This thesis benefited from the assistance of many people. Without the contribution of all the South Sudanese women and men who participated, this thesis would not have been possible. I hope that this thesis helps give them a voice and empower them in their quest for justice.

I am deeply grateful to all my family and friends who have supported me over the years. A special thank you to my dear friend, Kerry Ludwig and fellow student Hayley Jordan, for their companionship and encouragement throughout some troublesome and confusing times. I am especially grateful to Anne McGowan for her support, interest and keen eye for detail in the final stages of writing.

The support of my parents, Vjeko and Smilja Milos, and my brother Ivan, ensured that I stayed focused, well fed and sane. My partner, Sam McGowan, has been a constant source of support – emotional, moral and financial – during my studies. He has endured and lived with all the stresses associated with a doctorate, and this thesis would certainly not exist without him.

I am grateful for the academic and professional guidance of the entire Legal Studies Department, past and present, especially the staff who have assisted in supervising my thesis over the years – Paul Marks, Dr Cheryl Simpson, Mary McKenna, Dr Jenny Burley, Dr Maria Giannacopoulos and Dr Angela Melville. Each one has provided invaluable assistance, and this thesis is a product of their combined influences and support. I thank them all for their time and patience, and for helping me grow as a researcher and a person.

Finally, I would like to thank the man who made it all happen. Through his encouragement and support, Professor Francis Regan started my journey as a postgraduate student. He has been an inspiration in my life for many years, and will no doubt continue to guide me through the rest of my travels. This thesis is dedicated, therefore, to Francis – a supervisor, mentor and dear friend.

In loving memory of Professor Francis Benedict Regan
1954-2010
LIST OF TABLES

Table 2.1: Reasons for not wanting to take further action..................................... 28
Table 4.1: Number of Sudan born entrants to Australia 2000-2011...................... 93
Table 4.2: Number of Sudan born entrants to South Australia 2000-2011......... 95
Table 5.1: Age of participants.............................................................................. 137
Table 5.2: Length of time spent in Australia...................................................... 138
Table 5.3: Refugee camps/countries of asylum................................................ 138
Table 5.4: Length of time spent in refugee camps ............................................. 139
Table 5.5: Reasons for coming to Australia...................................................... 140
Table 5.6: Living arrangements after arrival in Australia................................. 140
Table 5.7: Education level.................................................................................. 146
Table 6.1: Number of participants experiencing legal problems..................... 153
Table 6.2: Number of participants who took action for particular problems........ 170
LIST OF FIGURES

Figure 3.1: Map of Sudan................................................................. 52
Figure 3.2: Map of Sudan showing North and South divide..................... 55
Figure 3.3: Map of Darfur............................................................... 64
Figure 3.4: A South Sudanese customary court proceeding..................... 71
Figure 4.1: Map of Kakuma Refugee Camp....................................... 87